Herut parley demands annexation at end of five-year autonomy

SIVAN 10, 5789 -

By SARAH HONIG Post Political Reporter

TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 1979 •

TEL AVIV. - Warm tribute to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat is to be included among the political draft resolutions likely to be adopted by the Herut convention this week.

The resolutions are seen as having the personal blessing of Prime Minister Menahem Begin since they were drawn up by cabinet secretary Arye Na'or. They are almost certain to be adopted, but minor amendments still might be made in

One of the draft resolutions expresses Herut's "appreciation for the civil courage of Egyptian Presi-dent Anwar Sadat's readiness to enact peace with Israel in the face of open hatred and hostility of extremist Arab leaders." But other draft resolutions take a tough stand on the nature and future of the autonomy plan, and are seen as taking the wind out of Geula Cohen's Herut Loyalist Circle's antitreaty campaign at the convention. Thus some of the resolutions reaffirm "the right of the Jewish people over the Land of Israel in its historic entirety" and say that when the five years of autonomy are up, the territories should be annexed to Autonomy for the residents of Judea, Samaria and Gaza is approved of, a Palestinian state is ruled out and an all out war against the PLO is urged.

But despite the overwhelming majority in resolutions of unequivocal support for Begin's foreign policies, the prime minister yesterday felt the first sting of crificism at the convention, when the tedious proceedings erupted into violence.

Delegates who sat through a day of dull speeches and lacklustre debate did not notice at first that Rafi Tal of Neve Avivim, a sympathizer of Cohen's Herut Loyalist Circle, was delivering a biting attack on the prime minister. But when Tal called on the delegates to condemn Begin for having recognized the Palestinian state delegates rose from their seats, rushed to the rostrum, snatched the microphones from Tal and a

A speedboat carrying terrorists and a rocket launcher was sunk by the Israel navy off the Israeli coast near the Lebanese border Sunday

The body of one terrorist has been recovered, and the navy last night was reported to be continuing its search for at least one more dead

According to the army spokesman, a routine navy patrol noticed a suspicious craft off the coast at Rosh Hanikra Sunday evenings. The spokesman said that after missiles were noticed on the deck of the speedboat, it was ordered to stop so that it could be searched. But instead, the speedboat tried to head back to Lebanese waters and was sunk in an ensuing exchange of fire.

From fragments washed ashore, it has been ascertained that the speedboat carried several rocket launchers attached to a self-timing device on board, with the terrorists' intention obviously being to launch rockets against an Israeli civilian target, the spokesman said. A naval source said the rocket launcher was mounted on a raft made from two empty barrels.

Gemayel escapes muraer bia

BEIRUT (AP). — Right-wing Christian leader Pierre Gemayel narrowly escaped assassination yesterday when a remote-controlled bomb exploded near his car.

The 74-year-old Gemayel's two ons, political and military leaders of his Phalange Party, have been the targets of similar attempts this year.

The "Voice of Lebanon" radio station, operated by the Phalange Party, said that a booby-trapped car exploded near Gemayel's white Buick as he drove on the coastal highway, 16 km. north of Beirut. "A fire started in Gemayel's car, but luckily he only suffered minor wounds in the face and the back of the head," the radio said. He was admitted to a nearby hospital.

Ten pedestrians were injured in the blast and four cars burned, rightist sources said.

Gemayel's assessination attempt provoked tension along the "green line" that divides Beirut into Moslem and Christian sectors. Jeeps loaded with policemen patrolled major crossing points and advised non-Christians to avoid driving through the Christian sector.

ROME. — With 24 million out of some 38 million ballots counted in the election of the new Italian Senate, the Communists were losing substantially and Premier Giulio Andreotti's Christian Democrats were holding their own last night.

The Christian Democrats drew 38.8 per cent, one-tenth of a point down from the 38.9 per cent they now have.

Scathing criticism by Chief Justice Yoel Sussman 'No civilized' land would stand Israeli officials

Jerusalem Post Reporter For the second time in two months, scathing criticism of the government administration has been laid down by the President of the Supreme Court, who yesterday said the Israeli public admistration would not be tolerated by any "civilized country." During a Jerusalem hearing in which he was severely critical of state officials' failure to honour state debts. Justice Yoel Susaman said the "administration should be replaced and those officials who don't do their jobs should be dismissed." Sussman's remarks came two ment in contempt of court for going ahead with plans to build a road in the Negev despite an injunction against the construction. Yesterday he was hearing a plea from a boy blinded in an accident involving a military vehicle.

In 1977 the Tel Aviv District Court awarded the boy IL2.354m., but the state paid out only IL500,000 pending an appeal to the Supreme Court. But even after a January ruling by the court rejecting the appeal, the state has failed to pay the award to the plaintiff, who again turned to the supreme court. The hearing was set for yesterday.

but a few days ago the state paid out the remaining sum to the plaintiff, whose lawyer therefore claimed the state should pay the court expenses. Sussman yesterday ordered the state to pay IL20,000 in court expenses, and also took the unusual step of ordering the sum to be paid within two weeks.

In his criticism of the state administration, he declared that civilized country would tolerate" the government administration. Those officials who do not fulfil their tasks should be dismissed... there are officials who sit and do nothing and

Turning to previous state failures to pay debts. Sussman charged that such debts "undermine the payments morality of the public."

"If the state does not honour the law, why should an ordinary citizen see it as his duty to pay sums of money by order of the court," the justice challenged.

Sussman's remarks caused -a minor sensation at the Justice Ministry. Officials noted that it was the second time the justice's criticism of the public administration had been so sharp within such a short time.

that Begin was doing well "both in the country and in his party."

At a press conference in Cairo, Dayan was asked whether he brought any message from Begin. His reply was a strong restatement of Israeli policy. He said that clear there were "some very basic points in the Israeli policy which we do not intend to change." These were: No Palestinian state on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Jerusalem to remain the undivided Ghali said he completely disagreed with Dayan.

Yesterday evening Dayan and his team began normalization negotiations with Ghali and other Egyptian officials at the foreign ministry building here. There will probably be a further session tomorrow morning before Dayan leaves for home. (Dayan will spend today touring Lutor, in southern Egypt). But it is already clear that more negotiating will be required, on a lower level, before the tangible effects of the "open borders" begin

Civil aviation officials from both countries, for example, will have to define the precise cartographical details of the proposed air corridor between Cairo and Tel Aviv before commercial airliners can ply the route. Israeli sources are hoping, though, that the rough path of this corridor can be agreed upon during the present round of talks.

The air corridor is not likely to connect the two cities in a straight line over the Negev. Israel, it is understood, would not favour that, mainly for security reasons. Instead, planes will be required to fly slightly out to sea before swinging back in over the Egyptian coast.

Dayan's small Israel Aircraft Industries "Beechcraft" jet flew that route yesterday, making the journey in less than an hour.

The fact that the air corridor is still to be delineated means that the Sadat-Begin plane trip from Hatzerim last Sunday, ostensibly "inaugurating the corridor," was rather a symbolic and anticipatory trip than a real "inaugural."

The Dayan-Ghali talks also will examine the possibility of land and sea linkage. But the Israeli assumption yesterday seemed to be that both sides would prefer to start with an air link and gradually progress from Ghali announced that he and Dayan had agreed to open direct telephone and telex communications between their two ministries.

Israeli sources said these links would be used by the ministers themselves and also by the two "normalization teams."

Another broad area of issues concerps the hand-back of El-Arish and unsettled questions connected with it. The Israeli side was very aware that agreements and arrangements made now would inevitably serve as precedents during the subsequent stages of the withdrawal from Sinai.

The semi-official "Al Ahram" asserted yesterday that there had been no agreement regarding currency exchange, and insisted that only transfers into the major world currencies would be negotiated. But Israeli sources point out that there are large amounts of Israeli pounds still held by El-Arish residents and these people will certainly be pressing to exchange them at reasonable terms. Any solution here is bound to set the pattern for future currency relations, and for this reason both sides are treading carefully.

Also still outstanding are the questions of fishing rights in the Bardawil Lagoon and off the Gaza coast, and the continued employment of El-Arishi labourers in Israel. Israeli sources stressed again that the principle guiding their stand will be that of reciprocity and commonality of Dayan and Ghali will also look tional committee of military officers claimed yesterday to have ousted the military government of Lt. Gen. Fred W.K. Akuffo in Ghana and to have seized power throughout the country, according to a Radio Accra broadcast monitored here.

Ghana rebels claim gov't overthrown LOME, Togo (AP). - An insurrec-

But earlier reports from Accra said that the Akuffo government had survived an attempted coup led by air force Maj. Opuku Mensah, although the rebels seized the state radio station and freed an officer who was jailed following another abortive coup attempt on May 15.

Other Radio Accra broadcasts monitored in London and South Africa as well as reports from the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug identified the rebellion leader as a flight lieutenant Jerry Rawlings, but gave no other information about him.

Weekend closing of petrol stations rejected by Knesset committee

HOME NEWS

Jerusalem Post Reporter The Ministerial Committee on Energy Conservation yesterday rejected the proposal to close petrol stations on weekends as a means of reducing fuel consumption.

Opposition was based on grounds that a one-day shutdown would not deter motorists from purchasing all the petrol they want - especially because the typical Israeli car owner drives as much on Saturday as on all other six days of the week combined. Fears were voiced that long queues would form at petrol stations on Fridays, with motorists bringing along jerrycans to fill too.

Also sidetracked — at least for the present — were adoption of summer time, a reduction in taxes for cars below 1,300 cc engine displacement, and imposition of a standard 80 kph. maximum speed limit on all roads and highways.

Still pending is a proposal for a mandatory one-day-a-week "day of rest" for every motor vehicle. The fate of this proposal will be determined after the Ministry of Transport produces a detailed estimate of the amount of fuel such a measure could save.

 Flat owners in apartment buildings would be allowed to cut their flats off from the building's central heating and hot water systems, after an amendment is made to the Land Law of 1971. This requires all flat owners in such a building to share the expenses regardless of the amount of heating or hot water consumed.

All of the committee's recommendations now go to the Ministerial Economic Committee, where final decisions are expected next week.

The secretary of the Jerusalem Merchants Association, Avraham Birnbaum, last night voiced doubts about the idea of continuous operation of retail shops.

'It may cause more problems than it would solve," Birnbaum said. "First, you would have to revise Israeli shoppers' buying habits after all these years of split-day openings. In addition, a shopowner who asks his employees to work without a break - even the same number of hours a day - will be courting trouble. The labour organizations will certainly demand compensation for such a change, and in the end it will be the shopper who foots the bill."

Shostak calls for more preventive medicine care

Post Knesset Reporter Health Minister Elieser Shostak suggested in the Knesset yesterday that a larger share of the nation's health budget be spent on preventive medicine.

Surveying his ministry's activities during the budget debate, Shostak said that only a miniscule portion of the 7.5. per cent of the GNP that Izrael spends on health services goes for prevention.

Shostak said that skyrocketing medical costs are causing most countries to curtail expenditure on corrective medicine and to increase resources in the areas of public health and preventive medicine.
"Will we be able to cope with the anowballing needs of corrective medicine if we continue to ignore the needs of preventive medicine and Public health?" Shostak asked. Hasn't the time come to change our entire conception and policy? Shostak also called attention to the growing shortage of geriatric specialists. Israel's population is steadily aging, Shostak said, but the shortage of doctors qualified to treat them is becoming increasingly

He attributed this shortage to the general trend of young doctors to prefer the more prestigious appoint-ment as a hospital staff position to

Few countries can boast, like Inrael, of having one doctor per every 400 or 450 inhabitants, Shostak said. But this statistic is misleading he declared, for it conceals, for example, the fact that in localities far from the main population centres medical care is unsatisfactory, He said it doesn't show that certain types of patients - like the old were being short-changed.

In a booklet Shostak tabled in the Knesset yesterday, he wrote that there is something paradoxical about Israel's health services, Onthe one hand, the conditions exist togiving medical service that would be among the best in the world: the highest doctor-population ratio in the world, the high level of the doctors, enough buildings and equipment proximity of the population to medical centres, and a high level of public awareness of medical

'On the other hand," Shortak writes, "the service actually given is not good and it is expensive. It is clumsy, uncoordinated, slow, it takes too long to make a diagn and to give proper treatment, it is inadequate in the area of preventive medicine, it steals the patient's time and makes him stand in queues and take repeated and superfluous

No rethinking of linkage on development loans now

By SHLOMO MAOZ Post Economic Reporter

The government will only reexamine the linkage on development loans in a year's time. There is no basis for reports that it will go back on its recently announced decision to link these loans 100 per cent to the Cost-of-Living index.

This was said yesterday in the Knesset Finance Committee by Finance Minister Ehrlich, during discussion of the government's new economic policy.

Amos Hadar MK (Alignment-Labour) said it was impossible to take the government's intentions seriously if the finance minister himself has said the loans policy would be re-examined.

Adi Amorai MK (Alignment-Labour) said the government was merely putting pebbles in the downhill path of a run-away cart. He called for government intervention to halt inflation before it reached the three digit level and urged a reversal of the floating currency policy.

Prof. Asaf Raxin, who heads the Economic Planning Authority, greeted the move on development loans as a first step in reform of the capital market. Finance Ministry Director-

General Amiram Sivan said the government was gradually pulling out of the capital market and that the linkage decision was the latest step in this direction. Grants and not subsidies abould be used to help exports and industry in development towns This was the only way to ensure that it was not inflation that determined the extent of subsidies.

Sivan also said agriculture would be treated in the same way as industry in the linking of development

Menahem Savidor (Hemi-Liberals) said: "The finance minister and all of us are living on borrowed time. If we don't significantly halt inflation in two or three months, we shall lose what remains of the people's trust."

The new map still awaits Defence Minister Ezer Weizman's authorisation, but settlers in the valley were reported pleased with the plan, which ministry officials said guarantees water supplies. The new regional council now encompasses the territory from near Beit Shean to the Jerusalem-Jericho road.

Three months ago the OC West Bank ruled that there would be no territorial continuity to the Jordan Vailey council. He said then that the council would be made up of H separate enclaves. But settlers then protested, saying that the army's pian denied them guaranteed access to water and water supply routes.

The settlers are still protesting that they are under the jurisdiction of the military command, and say they want Israeli civilian administration on the region.

TEL AVIV. -- Workers are expected Nablus for Jewish settlement this week, a source close to Ministerial Seitlement Committee chairman Ariel Sharon said yesterday.

Orders requisitioning 800 dunams of privately owned land at Rujeib, about seven km. south of Nablus, were issued following Sunday's cabinet decision, according to Deputy Defence Minister Mordechai Zipori. Unless the Arab owners appeal the order in court - and win the case — they will retain title to the land but be prevented from entering it. Zipori said he did not believe that attempts to prevent development of a settlement there would succeed.

Extensive work is needed on the rocky hill including the clearing of a two-km. road right of way there, Benni Katsover, the leader of Gush Emunim's Klon Moreh group, said. The first families to settle there

'No scars' means lenient rape sentence

By Yoram Bar Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Tel Aviv District Court yesterday sentenced a 30-yearold man to two and a half years in jail for raping a 17-year-old girl, but not before the judge pointed out that the case was special because the girl consented to sexual intercourse on an earlier occasion with the man. The district court panel said they "got the impression that the rape did not leave a real scar on the victim," which they said was one reason for what they called a relatively 'lenient' sentence for Zion Ohaion. Ohalon met the girl through his sister, and through court testimony it became apparent that they began a relationship that she later regretted. When she tried to end the affair, Ohaion beat her and took her to an apartment where he raped her.

Tax collections increase by 93%

Post Economic Reporter

Tax collections went up by 93 per cent in April-May 1979 as compared with the corresponding period in 1978, the State Revenue Administration said yesterday. The rise represents an increase of 20 per cent in real terms.

Even if the rise in prices between the two periods is discounted and a rise of some 5 per cent in the gross national product is also offset, the figures indicate a rise of some 9 per cent in income tax collection and of 21 per cent in VAT. Both increases point to progress being made in the collection of taxes.

Iran attempts to cool Arab autonomy violence

TEHERAN. - Authorities yesterday lifted a state of emergency imposed on southern Iran's main port city in an apparent attempt to cool tempers after last week's bloody fighting in which, Iranian press reports said, about 100 people were

The emergency order was: clamped on Khorramshahr last Wednesday when autonomy-seeking ethnic Arabs defled orders to surrender their arms and clashed with government forces

The end of the emergency was in-tended to ease the tension caused by an Arab ultimatum that they would resume fighting today if their demands are not met.

The governor-general of the oilproducing province of Khuzestan said yesterday that the Arabs fighting government forces last week had had secret contacts with George Habash, leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP).

Rear-admiral Ahmad Madani, who is also head of the Iranian navy, said that Habash crossed over from Iraq incognito to get in touch with "counter-revolutionaries" in Khorramshahr and other towns in Khuzestan. Madani said he did not have precise details and said the terrorist leader had since left Iran.

Meanwhile, Iran's revolutionary courts sentenced five more secret police and security officers to death and they were executed by firing squad at dawn yesterday, the state radio and Teheran newspapers reported. This raised the total number of firing squad executions to 261 since the shah was deposed last

The latest persons to be executed included Mohammad Karim Baserinian, the former chief of Savak - the shah's dreaded secret police — and two of his subordinates.

The radio said the court in the holy city of Qom tried three other people together with the Savak head. One of the three hanged himself in his prison cell after being found guilty, the radio added, while the other two were sentenced to jail terms ranging from two to 12 years. (UPI, Reuter,

Sudan pledges to bar Amin from its soil

KAMPALA (AP). - The government of Sudan has pledged to bar deposed Ugandan dictator Idi Amin from using its southern territory as a military springboard against Uganda's new regime, the "Uganda Times" reported yesterday.

The newspaper, quoting Ugandan Foreign Minister Otemo Alimadi, said that the assurance was given last week in Khartoum, the Sudanese capital, during talks between Ugandan and Sudanese officials.

The officials, he reportedly said, denied allegations that "Sudan is behind Amin" and added that Sudan hoped "the new government will put this position of hostility to an end and maintain brotherly relations."

Sudan, which borders northern Uganda, has had strained relations with Uganda's seven-week-old government, primarily over allegations of mistreatment of Ugan-dan Muslims by Tanzanian army forces and soldiers of the new provisional government of President Yusufu Luie.

The two nations have not come to the stage of violent confrontation, but a tense air prevailed on Saturday when Tanzanian-Ugandan forces reached the border after capturing Amin's home village, the border village of Kiboko.

The bomb, which slightly injured four soldiers and caused considerable damage to nearby buildings, was symptomatic of a new wave of violence sweeping Northern . Ireland.

This violence is a fact of life that Britain's new Conservative govern-ment under Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will have to come to grips with, During April, 12 soldiers and policemen were killed. In terms of casualties to security forces, it was the worst month since May 1978. IN THE LAST 10 years, "The Troubles" have taken nearly 2,000 lives, including those of 298 regular Earlier this year, officials believed that the wave of bombings and shootings was timed to coincide with the British parliamentary election campaign. But now they fear that the increase may be a longer-range upsurge on the part of the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army, "We are seeing the results of the reorganization of the IRA Provo," a senior officer said at the British Military headquarters at Lisburn, south of Belfast. They reformed themselves in the cell system, like the Viet Cong and the National Liberation Front in Algeria. "That means that each unit is sealed off from other units, and their security is better. Conversely, it is much more difficult for our intelligence to penetrate. "They are carrying off fewer operations, but those are better planned and executed. There is more professionalism shown, and the British Army has a healthy respect for the Provo. We don't underestimate their new capability," the official said. Other military sources said that Provo sniper markamanship has improved, and that Provo gunmen are better at concealment than they used to be. Moreover, additional explosives are coming across the border from the Republic of Ireland. "We think they've got a new source of explosives," a police of-ficial said. 'They seem to be making the stuff out of reconstituted far tilizer at bases across the border,! Security officials admit that it is almost impossible to seal off the 500-

"There are hundreds of roads crossing an open border," one of-ficial explained. "To seal off the border in any effective way would mean the use of enormous manpower, and it would bring commercial life in that area to a halt."

A RECENT top secret British in-telligence report, written by Maj., Gen. James Glover, who has recently been assigned to Northern Ireland as commander of ground troops, indicated that there is no quick end to the troubles in sight.

The report indicated that the Provos would continue to get money and improved arms, that their estimated 1,300 members were increasingly less susceptible to interrogation techniques, and that the violence would continue as long as there is a British military presence. in Northern Ireland.

A copy of the report, which was circulated at the highest level of the British military, happened to be in a mail sack that was hijacked. The thieves sent it to IRA members in Belfast, where it was made public. British army officials candidly admit that the 18,000 troops in Northern Ireland — down from a high of 24,000 several years ago - cannot bring about a lasting solution. The troops can only hope to reduce the level of violence while some kind of politicalsolution is attempted. In insure

The British military is also worried about the surfacing of a new Republican group called the Irish National Liberation Army, which is well financed but has only 60 or so

This heavily Marxist group has strong connections to European and Middle East leftist and terrorist groups. It was this organization that took the responsibility for killing Airey Neave, a member of Parliament, in March

The new outbreak of violence has caused both Protestant and Catholic political leaders in Northern Ireland to call on Parliament in London to press for long-range solutions.

Their call has been echoed by Irish-American politicians in the U.S., among them speaker of the House Thomas O'Neill.

BUT THE CATHOLIC and Protestant leaders remain widely opposed on what steps ought to be taken to end the violence

Many Protestant leaders in Ulster and England have called for the death penalty to be reinstated, particularly for terrorists.

But civil servants in the Northern Ireland office believe that execution of terrorists would be self-defeating:

"Hanging a terrorist who kills a soldier is the surest way to create martyrs here," one official said. 'And if there is anything the British government does not need in trying to find a solution here it is Irish mar-

Some civil servants here still worry that with public pressure mounting for some kind of 'new in-itiative," the British may act too hastily. As one official, who has worked here for years, said:"It is no good talking about initiatives unless they come from the inside — not the outside. It's not up to the British or even the Americans to come up with solutions. It's up to the political factions within Northern Ireland....

"All we can do is bring the parties onto the stage where they might agree to some of our -- or their -proposals. Perhaps we could avoid terms like 'power-sharing' and 'link' with the Republic of Ireland.

"There could still be ways of appointing, on a proportional basis, members of sensitive government departments at the local level, like education, housing and transport, and therefore try to get those areas out of the volatile political arena so that both communities could have a chance to get to know and trust one another. We should also make sure that unemployment is reduced. It has been running 11 per cent in Northern Ireland and 20 per cent in some of the Catholic areas." Is there any cause for optimism in Northern Ireland? "I am more hopeful than optimistic," an official with long experience in Northern Ireland said. "There are no brilliant solutions waiting to be found, alas. Whatever is forthcoming in the way of new initiatives, any settlement here is going to be a very long, hard slog.' (Washington Post News Service)

Tycoon turns pirate in video-tape boom

By WILLIAM SCOBIE/Los Angeles

JOHN BLOOM, the British-born millionaire who achieved instant notoriety in the 1960s by building and losing a washing-machine empire. pleaded guilty in a Los Angeles court recently to selling pirated copies of such hit movies as "Star Wars" and "Patton." He had been making video-cassette duplicates of the copyrighted films and selling them at around $250. Rather a come-down for the tycoon who once ran a $25m, business from an Onassis-style yacht, owned villas in Cannes and lunched with the Queen. Well, perhaps not. Bloom, ever a man with an eye for the coming thing in business, was trying to corner a potentially vast and fast-growing market: the home video

Home video recorders are already reshaping American lives. These machines, such as Sony's Betamax, allow TV addicts to record television programmes and play them back at will. Or, if they know a Mr. Bloom, give a showing of the latest movie for friends by popping a contraband cassette into place.

Bored housewives slip cassettes of favourite "golden oldies" into their video recorders to lift their spirits. Lawyers record clients making wills to show that they're of sound mind in case of legal challenge. Sports fans record their heroes in action, hoping to pick up tips. Sex papers peddle porno cassettes for bedroom view-

MORE THAN 800,000 video recorders are in American homes today, and industry analysts predict a million more will be sold in 1979, despite the current price range of $600 to $1,200. Technology and massmarketing are lowering those prices steadily and by 1985 the machine will probably be in at least one-third of U.S. homes.

Almost all the recorders are made in Japan, and the price of the Betamax — most popular model in the U.S. — has been more than halved since sales began two years ago.

Many proud owners are building extensive libraries of their favourite films, then swapping them with other owners. And that pleases America's entertainment industry not at all.

Billions are at stake in a trial currently under way in Los Angeles in which MCA, parent company of Universal Studios, and Walt Disney Productions are attempting to ban the video recorder. The two companies are suing Japan's Sony Corporation, charging that it is violating movie copyrights by allowing consumers to duplicate films with the Betamax.

MCA's chairman, Lew Wasser-man, said in court: "If everyone has a copy of "Gone with the Wind," then obviously it's worthless." Since MGM recently sold "Gone with the Wind" to CBS-TV for a licensing fee of $85m., the film-and-television industry is anxiously awaiting the outcome. The stakes are immense the "threat to the economic stability of our business is very alarming, says one MCA executive.

For one thing, the machines allow viewers to cut out commercials. And advertising is the rock upon which American television is founded.

LOOMING behind this battle is the fate of another device which will have a vast impact on the viewing habits of the 100 million-plus Americans who watch TV. MCA and RCA Corporations are developing competing video-disc players which play back films and other visual material via 25-cm. platters which look like ordinary gramophone

MCA is sticking its neck out ahead of the field in what it hopes will be a multi-billion dollar market for everything from its old movies (''Jaws'' is already available on Viddisc at $16) to visual lessons on cooking and tennis. But these machines are limited to playback of pre-recorded material the big companies decide to market. Why buy a $16 video-disc of, say "Gone with the Wind," when you can record it free on a Betamax-type machine?

"It's a whole new field of entertainment," says one industry ex-ecutive. "Nobody knows how the chips are going to fall." Until they do, the video-pirates will have their day. Bloom, who was given a twoyear probationary term, is far from alone in his new field.

Los Angeles police and the FBI (movie piracy is a federal offence) are currently investigating several cases of possible theft of films, video-cassettes and raw video-tape.

One TV company executive is being questioned in connection with a cache of 600 films and videocassettes allegedly found by investigators at his home. The material, according to police, ranged from brand-new, unaired TV shows to the latest feature films, including 'Midnight Express.'

Prospect of full-scale exodus to Thailand

Famine stalks Cambodia

By BRIAN EADS/Bangkok

AFTER the ravages of Khmer Rouge rule and the enervating fight to wrest the country from their control. another beast is slouching towards Cambodia - famine.

Unless massive quantities of emergency food aid are channelled into Campodia soon, there will be the prospect of nationwide starvation and a full-scale exodus into Thailand, against which the present flood of refugees will pale into in-

"If you want to be an alarmist and a pessimist," a Red Cross official told me, "it could mean half the Cambodian population trying to enter Thalland." Depending on whose estimate you accept, this would mean something between two and four million people.

The prospect has become the most important preoccupation of Thailand's senior military men. Even at their most sober, they're talking in terms of between a quarter and half-a-million starving Cambodian refugees seeking to cross the border.

Already, among the thousands who have crossed in recent days are those who cite hunger as their prime They say that in the areas they left, in the northwest of the country, the new .Vietnamese-backed administration has told people they must lend for themselves. They tell of people subsisting on soups of tree bark and forest mushrooms.

VIETNAMESE and Khmer troops engaged in rooting out the remnants of Pol Pot forces are being fed with supplies airlifted from Vietnam. Cambodia is among the world's most fertile agricultural countries and, when the Pol Pot regime was ousted in January, was beginning to benefit from four years of forced collectivization and ambitious irrigation schemes.

That it should have come to the brink of famine is explained by four

Vietnamese and anti-Khmer Cambodian forces launched their invasion before harvesting of last ear's rice crop was complete.

The new Phnom Penh regime relaxed restrictions on travel, and hundreds of thousands of Cambodisms have been idly wandering the country in search of lost families. Ambushes and reprisal attacks against civilians by bands of Khmer. Rouge "reconnaisance forces" have prevented a return to work in many rice-growing areas. Agricultural experts in Bangkok say almost no preparations have been made for the planting of rice which must be done in June and July if there is to be a winter harvest. In many areas people have eaten their seed grain in desperation.

There is no prospect of Vietnam and Laos coming to the rescue. Vietnam suffered a rice shortfall of 2.4. million tons last year after drought, typhoons, crop pests and disease. So far it has been able to import only about 1.6 million tons of cereals, and in the south the starch ration is below half that considered as the absolute minimum human require-

Laos likewise suffered flood damage last year, and its needs are put at about 72,000 tons.

The only significant quantities of food grains available in the world are held by Western countries, notably the U.S. If another act of the Cambodian tragedy is to be forestalled there are political hurdles to be

"EVEN IF we have food aid to give. whom do we give it to?" asked an official of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). "Do we give it to Pol Pot or to the new Heng Samrin government?"

Only Soviet bloc countries have recognized the new regime. The Khmer Rouge delegate to the UN is recognized at least until the General Assembly in October, and efforts by the new government to win recognition at international forums have been thwarted.

It is a case of geopolitics winning over the generally accepted criteria for recognition — that a government controls the bulk of the population and land area. In this, the new regime in Phnom Penh is being contrasted with that in Kampala.

The only real loophole is offered by the International-Red Cross, which is not bound by political considerations. It is now engaged in the urgent search for action on Cambodia. Contacts have been made with representatives both of the Pol Pot and the Heng Samrin regimes, with a mind to channelling food and medical aid to both.

The question is whether either will allow Red Cross officials to prepare a shopping list of its needs, and to monitor the distribution of such aid as can be raised through an international appeal.

PRESERVING A PRECIOUS LANDSCAPE

luck in its cruel history: the landscape and valleys around the Old City are still here.

By comparison, most of the other medieval walled cities in Northern Europe and around the Mediterranean have not fared so well. When modern artillery 100 years ago became so powerful that city walls and the military clearance areas in front of them became meaningless, those towns expanded violently, obliterating the surrounding landscape with urban sprawl. More often than not, most or all of the old city walls were torn down in the

Being a poor and stagnant town right up until 1967, Jerusalem has had few such temptations. Only during the British Mandate was there any danger of destruction due to the beginnings of Jewish and Arab expansion outside of the city walls.

But due to enlightened British town planning, which prohibited building in the valleys and allowed it only on the ridges, the Old City of Jerusalem survived until 1967 riding high on the hill behind its magnificent wall, and dominating the surrounding valleys.

The building boom of united Jerusalem after 1967 could well have given us freeways down the valley of Gehinnom, 20-storey buildings around the Old City and roads for cars carved through it, and stretches of the Old Walls removed to let the town expand. This is what happened and many other cities.

BUT INSTEAD of this the valleys around the Old City were declared a National Park in 1968, thereby saving the landscape and inspiring views of the beautiful old walls.

To preserve this landscape is a simple and heautiful idea; the arid valleys we know from the Bible, with rocks and caves and graves and ruins and village houses to remain as they are, and the old vision of the Holy City above them to remain as it appeared in all the old pictures we know so well.

But to achieve this is not as easy as it sounds. The Old City and its valleys are now an island in a large city. They are no longer the end of the desert, but a preserved area in the middle of a growing modern town, in a throw-away society.

Just banning the buildings and hoping that everything will be alright will not work. The area is too exposed and subject to a thousand pressures, such as archaeological works, road works, parking needs and vandalism, to mention only a few of the dangers. There must be action to consolidate and defend the heart of the city.

By comparison one can point to the surprising calculation that if all the legitimate good ideas that had ever been suggested for Central Park in New York, such as museums, restaurants, road-widenings, parking areas, etc., had been carried out over the years, there would today be no Central Park.

THE FIRST problem is archaeology. Archaeology is extremely interesting at close quarters, but in terms of the landscape it is a disaster, like strip-mining. What does one do after the archaeologists have finished?

The second problem is the exposed nature of an arid landscape. There is no jungle that will grow over and cover up damage. Two stones put on top of each other may be visible in 100 years, an empty cigarette packet will defile a large area, and a load of contractors' rubbish conveniently dumped will mar the whole landscape. In other words you cannot leave an arid valley alone if it happens to lie in the middle of town.

Third, is the national park strictly a piece of landscape to be looked at from afar, or should it also be a park for people to enjoy, with grass, shade, trees, benches and play areas?

The city's answer to these demands are an attempt to balance, not a strict philosophy, maybe, but a realistic approach by the Jerusalem Foundation and the municipality at treating each part of the area according to its nature and its relation to the rest of the town.

The big slope south of Jaffa Gate is another archaeological garden. Enormous amounts of rubbish which were dumped outside of the Old City over thousands of years have been carted away to expose the wall to its full splendid height, and the impressive slope below it covered with low plants to keep its simplicity and dominance in the landscape.

8) The Birket Sultan pool at the foot of the slope, originally was to be refilled with water to recreate the large pool it used to be. But to prevent it from becoming a mosquitobreeding soup, one would have to provide either a constant renewal of fresh water or a complete system of swimming pool. Since both these alternatives are impossible in a poor and water-short city, it has been cleaned up and grass has been planted in the bottom to symbolize the old water surface.

4) Bloomfield Garden, which stretches from the King David Hotel to the railway station along the ridge opposite the old wall, as the visual end of the old landscape around the Old City, is planted with old olive trees brought from elsewhere and other trees and plants that have the same silver-green foliage as olive trees, like rosemary, lavender and pampas grass.

But in addition, since it lies very close to a densely populated part of town, it is also a park for people to use, and therefore has grass and benches and places to play. Since the violent green colour of grass is foreign to Jerusalem, the grass areas are surrounded and almost hidden by tall grey green plants.

THE IS NO rigorous discipline that unites these gardens. there is an overall feeling of respect for the dominance of the ancient walls and the delicate quality and historical importance of the arid valleys.

One can of course argue that things could have been done differently, but such argument may not ignore the real and objective challenges that had to be faced.

GENERAL MOBILISATION FOR WAR ON INFLATION

With the consent of the major responsible elements in the economy, we hereby declare a general mobilisation for the war against inflation.

War on inflation is a national imperative, overriding all political opinions and economic attitudes and viewpoints.

Inflation means a loss of proportion, exaggerated prices, and gross overcharging.

Inflation is a national scandal.

For this reason, the general mobilisation that we are declaring today is an act of national unity. Every man, woman, and child is being mobilised to join the fight against inflation, and to stand fast until its final retreat.

Wage-earner or self-employed, employee or employer, customer or seller, housewife or schoolchild, producer or consumer.

Inflation is a destructive enemy that gathers strength in direct proportion to your weakness and readiness to submit.

Here are some elementary regulations for how to behave in the emergency. In a war — act as in war. And this is war — on inflation.

Don't let them "diddle" you. Don't give in to every price.

Pause a moment, think, enquire, compare prices. Your money deserves some effort on its behalf. You worked hard to earn it. Someday your money will regain its value.

Buy only what you need, and not more.

Don't overdo your purchases, don't buy things that you really don't need now. Unnecessary purchases only add fuel to the flames of inflation. You will lose nothing by budgeting your purchases wisely.

Join savings and investment schemes —

the best safeguard for your money.

Government-sponsored savings schemes offered via the banks, government ("linked") securities, foreign currency accounts — all these are recommended to assure the value of your money. There is no point in hanging on to money that is not being used, but there is also no point in buying things that you don't really need. Savings will safeguard the value of money.

Check the quality of the goods and services that you buy.

Carefully examine the quality of the article and the kind of service that you are receiving. Refuse to pay for shoddy work, faulty service, or goods of shabby quality. Stand up for your rights, and you will be making your contribution in the war on inflation.

Don't try to live beyond your means.

It is not worthwhile — you only become frustrated, downhearted, and unnecessarily tense. And what is more — you are collaborating with the enemy: inflation.

Obey these regulations very carefully. We will continue to stand by you in the war against inflation. Watch out for additional material from the WAR-ON-INFLATION BOARD. Price comparison tables for different goods will be published every week. Check for yourself what you can afford to buy, and where. Your determination will bring victory.

WAR IS DECLARED INFLATION IS THE ENEMY

VICTORY IS VITAL

Local birdie watchers enter European badminton scene

By JACK LEON Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Israel made an auspicious debut in the international badminton arena by winning the consolation event of the eighth annual Plume d'Or team tournament in Paic Pires, near Lisbon, in late May. The six-person Israeli squad, which returned home last week, won three of its four matches in the seven-nation meet. until now restricted to European countries where badminton is a developing sport. The fortnight's visit to Por tugal was organized by the Israel Badminton Association, with help from the Israel Olympic Committee.

After a 7-0 drubbing by eventual winners Belgium in the first round, the Israelis came back commendably in the consolation event, overwhelming Italy 7-0 and Spain 7-0, 6-1 and 5-2. The team finished fifth in the overall standings, ahead of Spain and Italy. Switzerland was runner-up, with France and Portugal taking the next two places.

Israel - which competed as a 'guest team' at Paio Pires - was unanimously accepted for full membership of the Brussels-based Plume d'Or grouping at its annual meeting held during the tournament. It was also agreed that Israel will host the 1982 Plume d'Or championships. The important breakthrough into European competition came only after initial objections from France, which claimed that non-European nations were ineligible for membership. But there was no support for France's stand. The erusalem Post was told yesterday by IBA president Jeff Geffen, Israel's delegate at the meeting. The most successful members of Israel's squad were Chaya Grunstein, Nissim Duk and Yitzhak Serrouya, each of whom won three of their four singles matches. Grunstein also achieved similar success in women's doubles with Paloma Raychbart, as did Raychbart in three of her four mixed doubles matches with different partners.

Rico from losing on Sunday in Tel Aviv. Boaz Yannai shoots over lers dressed in Israel's white uniforms, due to the visitors' luggage being held up en route.

Israel barred from Asia track squad in World Cup games

TOKYO (Reuter). — The president of the Asian Amateur Athletic Association yesterday said that no Israeli athletes had been selected to represent Asia at the World Athletics Cup in Montreal this August because their "standards were inadequate."

Esther Roth (hurdles) and Pazit Fabian (800-metre run) had participated in the Asian team at the first such event two years ago in Duesseldorf. But no Israelis competed in last week's Tokyo track and field meet, where the Montreal athletes were picked. The Tokyo games were deprived of official championship status by the International Amateur Athletics Federation and became an invitational event after the organizers excluded Israel and Taiwan.

A squad of 44 from nine countries will represent Asia in Montreal. It will face teams from the U.S., Africa, the Americas, Oceania, the top two nations from the European Cup and a "European selection."

WHO IS KILLING THE GREAT CHEF? OF EUROPET: Starring George Segal, Jacqueline Bisset and Rebert Merley. Jacqueline Inner and Directed by Ted Hetcheff.

WHAT IS the most terrible crime that can happen in a three-star restaurant? Oversalting the vichyssoise? Using margarine in the sauce bernaise? Serving mushrooms from a can? In this film, it's murdering the chefs. And it happens in the tastlest, spiciest and funniest ways.

This sinister souffle matches George Segal and Jacqueline Bisset as a divorced couple at opposite ends of the culinary spectrum. He's a fast foods franchiser who thinks that frozen tacos are the height of haute cuisine and that any meal that costs over $1.29 is a rip-off. She is one of the world's most distinguished chefs, who spends loving hours lacing her Bombe Richelieu with double deep chocolate and raspberry liquer.

Between them stands Robert Morley as a gargantuan gourmand eating himself into oblivion. Professionally he is the publisher of a mini-Michelin that rates Europe's finest dining places. Privately, he's a scathing wit, whose sharp tongue stops wagging only when his taste

Morley arranges a special dinner for the Queen, and he invites those he considers to be the four greatest cheis in Europe to prepare the repast. His selection also serves as the basis for a murderer who does in the chefs in accordance with their particular specialties. A renowned Swiss chef for example, is discovered in his own oven, roasted like his legendary pigeon en croute. Nearly $200,000 was budgeted for the food prepared and consumed in the film, and one of France's most brilliant chefs, Paul Bocuse, was responsible for that preparation. Among the victuals to be enjoyed vicariously are lobster with artichokes, oyster stew with champagne sauce, truffle soup, roast suckling pig, pressed duck, veal scallop Massenet, fillet of sea bass and, for desert, Le Bombe Richelieu. Both culsine and locations are important in the production. In Paris

IT'S A long time since the Sonja Henie ice-skating musicals of the late '30s and the Eather Williams swimming stories of the '40s, but the plot of "Ice Castles" could have been porrowed from any of those movies:

Lexie (Lynn-Holly Johnson) is a 16-year-old girl from Iowa who has a boyfriend (Bobby Benson), a local skafing coach and an overprotective father. She also has an extraordinary talent for ice-skating, putting her well on the road to Olympic com-petition. Success builds on success until, as in all movies of this genre, the Inevitable Accident occurs. Lexie becomes partially blind, and her world collapses until family and friends unite to help her overcome

The performances in "Ice Castles" are surprisingly good for such a mediocre story. Lynn-Holly Johnson, in her film debut, proves a competent actress while demonstrating the talents that took her to a starring role in Ice-Capades. Robby Benson does well in handling the emotions of an adolescent, and top-seeded amateur skaters Mari Schuster and Staci Loop give excellent displays of Olympic-standard ice-skating.

If it all sounds a bit too familiar, it is because we have just seen the same story in "Little Mo" and "International Velvet." Teenage girl, great natural talent, frightened parents, first love, kindly first coach replaced by more aloof pro,

Despite the hackneyed plot, the film does convey an acceptable portrayal of growing up and of first love.

NATIONAL LAMPOON'S ANIMAL HOUSE: Starring a Rabelaisium assort-ment of orginstic undergraduates led by John Beluski, Directed by John Landis.

REMEMBER THE SWEETHEART of Sigma Chi — the sweet, innocent girl-next-door?

Forget her. She's been replaced by the sweetheart of Delta Tau Chi, the obnoxious fraternity of "National Lampoon's Animal House," and she's anything but sweet and innocent. She's sexy, stacked and a million laughs. She is a "looker" with a sharp sense of humour, the sort of girl who can turn a sweater into a sensual adventure and reduce fraternity members to quivering jello. And she enjoys every minute of it. She doesn't have too much in the way of intellect either, because these particular brothers wouldn't know how to handle anyone too intelligent. Remember Joe College of 1962? He was a sharp-eyed young man with neatly creased slacks, white buck shoes, short, neat hair and a buttondown shirt? Well, you can forget him too. He's been replaced by Bluto (John Belushi), a slovenly, rowdy collegian, whose eating and sexual habits make Henry VIII look like Emily Post. In fact most of the memories you have of "college life" before the radical '60s can be tossed aside. No one has ever made a movie like "Animal House" before — and no one could have done it as the publishers of the most singularly non-sanctimonious magazine in the U.S., "The National Lampoon." Only the "Lampoon" could surpass itself in tastelessness issue after isaue with parodies on John Kennedy's sex life or the joy of being a bomber pilot over Vietnam. And in 'Animal House" its makers have succeeded again in presenting an aspect of American life through its

At fictitious Faber college, the notorious fraternity Delta Tau Chi are a filthy, outrageous lot, who guz-zle beer, spit mashed potatoes and drive motorcycles indoors, while practically failing out of school. They try to make love whenever and wherever possible. They have, in a sense, discovered the true purpose of American higher education: sex and other sensual pleasure. The plot of the story has something to do with the efforts of the nastiest college dean to ever grace a movie screen to shut down the frat house. This is merely an excuse for a series of hilarious gags and skits aimed at the preposterous caste systems of most colleges, the assiminity of popular profs on the make for their undergraduate students and the pomposity of administrators who perceive themselves as "popes in

It is exaggerated, of course, but it is, after all, a lampoon, so anything goes. Casting is supurb, especially John Belushi as Bluto, the manglest animal of them all, who devours triple cheeseburgers in a single, overflowing mouthful.

In the end, despite outrageous, offensive and antagonistic humour, the animals prove a loveable lot. Parents who sent their kids to college will learn how their money was spent. Students of the early '50s and '60s will find out what it was really like and those who studied in the more radical '80s will enjoy seeing what they missed. The Animal House might even serve as a model for the somewhat lacklustre student body of the docile '70s. Whether it would prove a good or a bad model depends entirely on one's sense of DAVID GEORGE which great tear-jerkers are made. Following in the moist-eyed tradition, "International Velvet" capitalizes on the charm and wideeyed appeal of 14-year-old Tatum O'Neal, a seasoned performer who at age 9 won an Oscar for her role in "Paper Moon." Here Velvet (played by Nanette Newman, the producer's wife) has grown up and is living with a writer (Christopher Plummer) on a beautiful estate in southwest England. Her American niece, 11year-old Sarah Brown (Tatum O'Neal), whom she barely knows, is suddenly orphaned when her parents are killed in an auto crash. "Utterly alone in the world," as the script must have read, she begrudgingly comes to live with Aunt Velvet, a stranger with whom she thinks she has nothing in common.

Inconsolable, Sarah pouts and mopes and broods until she discovers her aunt's passion, the world of horses. She falls in love with a young colt, "son" of her aunt's prizewinning thoroughbred and simultaneously begins to respond to Aunt Velvet's love. Sarah also goes on to win the Olympic gold medal for riding for Britain — such is the stuff of which great tear-jerkers are Both Elizabeth Taylor and Deborah Kerr were asked to play the role of Aunt Velvet and refused. Too corney a part, perhaps?

mous versatility changing from 11year-old Sarah-in-mourning to a sophisticated 18-year-old gold medal champion, Anthony Hopkins, as her tough-as-nails trainer, brings the only salt and pepper the supersweet film has to offer.

All in all, with the Devon cliffs rising majestically along the sea, the picture-postcard green fields dotted with thatch-roofed cottages and, of course, the proverbial beauty of sculptured velvet horses jumping in lyric 2:4 time, 'International Velvet" is indeed a positive, heartwarming film, one which children can safely view. That, in the X-rated cinema of the 70's, is no mean feat.

The panel of summer paean singers was drawn from the ranks of the Nature Preservation Society. What could have been an entertaining and instructive 50 minutes turned out to be rather dull except for the story about the short-toed eagle.

This bird does things the other way round — spends his summer with us and his winters in the heart of Africa. (Most birds are clever enough to fly to Europe for the summer.) The reason is, of course, a practical one: food, Mr. Short-Toes feeds off reptiles and these hibernate (here) during the winter months. So, though he could have found a climate to suit his taste somewhere in the south, back to Africa he goes to feast on black mambas and whatever other goodies he can pick up.

It is said that when God gave Israel the Tora, the face of the earth was as hushed as noon of a summer day. Is noon of a summer day really hushed? I am afraid we will never know. Instead of concentrating on this one fascinating aspect - what plants and animals do (unlike the proverbial mad dogs and Englishmen) to survive an Israeli summer day, we were treated to many little beginnings and no ends. Ephraim Aba shortchanged us this

ANOTHER DISAPPOINTMENT was the "Stories of Converts to Iudaism' Thursday, 1705 hrs.). One told of a Catholic girl in Alsace-Lorraine who found in Judaism a more attractive way of life than in her rigid Catholic background. Another told of a Sicilian who abandoned his faith. turning to Protestantism and coming to Judaism after attempting to find some kind of Jewish believers in Jesus or Christian believers in Judaism. There were gaps in both these stories.

There are no Jewish missionaries and, to the best of knowledge, rabbla do their best to dissuade converts, urging them to seek peace of mind in their original faith (which was done in both instances). If these stories are worth recording, we should at least have some elementary answers to basic questions. Why does a normal, evidently middle class and well brought up, French girl join the most persecuted of all races of her own volition, without as much as mention of a Jewish young man or any other motivation? If we are to be left in the dark, then we might as well not have been introduced to the subject at all.

There was also a story about a British girl who not only wound up in the mikve, but also induced her boy friend to mend his ways and return to the orthodox fold. But not before he had been given a thorough scolding for living in sin with a shiksa (her own words). I'd innocently assumed that doing the wrong thing to a good Jewish daughter was an even more beinous crime. Anyway, the two are now happily ensconced in a religious kibbutz, presumably performing all the

A PREMIERE, a revival and a repeat of a recent success made up the latest programme of the Batsheva Dance Company at the Jerusalem Theatre (May 30).

The premiere was "3 a.m.," dance for two, created by Douglas Nielsen (a member of the company) with himself and Debi Smulian as Five lines, like a musical staff, were stretched aloft across the stage but they signified telephone wires; even before the curtain opened, we heard the familiar refrain "The international lines are busy. Please wait and take your turn."

Irritatingly repeated again and again, it was later mixed with "Tangerine Dream" music — most appropriately, as the two dancers were (according to the programme)

finding their "levels of reality within

Their energetic, perpetual motion and entwined relationship seemed to have more to do with tangerine dreams (they even wore tangerine and black) than with the telephone message. The impression was more of two good dancers showing how well they could work together than of any message that the 3 a.m. (apparently unanswered) call could suggest. "Percussion Concerto," created nine years ago for the company by Norman Morrice (now Royal Ballet director in London) is a little

"classic" in a certain type of modern dance style — symmetrical, ex-ploiting parallel lines, exploring every kind of stretch amd bend.

The five couples sometimes moved like puppets but were as often sinuous and sensual. Now and again one or two broke out of the general pattern but soon moved back, while a lone man (Per-Olof Fernlund) tried tragically to join their ritualistic way of life. The effectiveness of it all lay in the precision of the routines as against the freer movements of the man, and in the complete concordance of choreography with composer

Leonard Salzedo's percussion rhythms.

"Stravinsky Dance Circus" looked even better here -- "boxed" in perspective on stage and with additional lighting effects as well as the flickering "ring" — than it did in the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv. The "live" orchestra there (the Israel Philharmonic) could, of course, find no compensation on tape, but the performance was slick, smooth, sure.

Yet I missed the thrust of excitement that came with the rehearsal performances I saw - and which even the final performance at the Mann Auditorium had to some ex-

Progress slow on UK anti-Arab boycott law

By ALAN ELSNER Jorusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV - There is little chance of the British parliament enacting legislation against the Arab boycott in the foreseeable future, Lord Byers, the leader of the British Liberal Party in the House of Lords said here vesterday.

Byers, who introduced an all-party anti-boycott bill in November last year, was speaking at a luncheon organized by the Anglo-Israel Chamber of Commerce. He is presently in Israel as a guest of the dinistry of Finance.

"My bill never really had a realistic chance of being accepted," Byers said," in view of the shortage of parliamentary time. But even if there had been enough time for it to pass all the necessary legislative stages, it would have foundered on the combined opposition of the Labour and Conservative party front

However, Byers thought that some tangible benefits had come out of the exercise. "A parliamentary select committee was set up to examine the whole subject of the boycott and after sitting for four months and hearing $2 witnesses, it produced a report with some very specific recommendations."

According to Byers, most of the witnesses, some of whom came from the U.S. to explain the results of the anti-boycott legislation there, were against the existence of the boycott. Those who advised leaving the situation in Britain as It was at present generally represented interests engaged in heavy trading with the Arab states. "Even they found the boycott morally distatesful," Byers said, "but were unwilling to disturb the status quo.'

Among the committee's recommendations was a call to companies to refuse to sign contracts which included clauses referring to the boycott and an appeal to the British government to "consider refusing to handle boycott documents.

"We also called on the Department of Trade to refuse to certify negative certificates of origin," Byers said. These documents are racist and I believe that there may be grounds for testing their legality under the Race Relations Act. It may well be that we win our first victory against the boycott by using anti-racist legislation. (These are documents certifying that directors of specific firms are not of Jewish origin.)

In its reply to the committee's recommendations, the Labour government said that it "would like to end the boycott and will do its best to mitigate its effects." However, the government refused to put the subject on the agenda of the European Council. "The government said that it would not be ahead of the pack, but would join in a European consensus against the boycott if one exists," Byers said.

The new Conservative government of Margaret Thatcher, in Byers' opinion, will not be less favourable than the previous one, "and may well be more favourable." However, Byers saw the next step was to take an in-itiative in the European Parliament which is to be elected at the end of

He revealed that plans were already afoot to form a group at the European parliament to monitor the effects of the boycott and influence the European Commission and Council of Ministers against it. "We will organize a group of like-minded members, determined to use the parliamentary process for justice and freedom of trade," Byers said.

If government approval for construction is not given, then an all-out campaign will be launched by the landowners to gain what they consider their due. At stake is land worth tens of millions of pounds, using built-up land values in the region

At a press conference Sunday, representatives of the plan's landowners and tenants pointed out that the current freeze on building permits is unfair to the landowners, who pay high land taxes but are prevented from developing their property. The area comprises 1,508 dunams north of the Yarkon River, from the coast to Derech Haifa.

The core of the problem is the government's indecision on whether to enlarge Sde Dov Airport, located in the heart of the Lamed Plan and used primarily for domestic flights. A plan to transfer the Sde Dov facilities to Ben-Gurion Airport was shelved after recommendations on the subject by the Harel Committee called for enlarging the existing facilities. # Moda'i: fuel to go up 20%

The surprisingly rapid devaluation of the pound combined with rising in-ternational fuel prices justify an upcoming fuel price increase of between 15 per cent to 20 per cent, Energy Minister Yitzhak Moda'i said yesterday.

Moda'l told The Jerusalem Post that his calculations recommending a fuel price hike include antiinflationary considerations. The original government plan for fuel price hikes foresaw an October hike. But the budget expected the pound's devaluation to reach IL21 per dollar, while in fact it has reached II.25. Meanwhile fuel suppliers are hik-

"Moda'i said fuel suppliers around the world are aware of the obstacles Israel faces in guaranteeing its oil supply, and the companies exploit this weakness. But the minister added that the situation of other countries is not much better. A world oil famine has forced consumers to make up for missing supplies with quantities, he said.

The ministry's policy, Moda'i said, is to continually adjust consumer fuel prices to the rising exchange rate, in the same way international

The energy ministry's policy; Moda'i added, is to gradually do away with what he called "the perversities of the price system," which a few years ago resulted in a 50 per cent gap between various consumers' fuel bills.

For example, Moda'i pointed at that flower exporters, getting ensitized energy — which makes up to per cent of their costs — should have their subsidies cancelled.

Industrials, for the most part, were lower. Selling was less intense than on Sunday, and a number of issues finished with plus signs. Argaman, both registered and bearer, were 10 lower. Dubek eased by a similar figure. Teva (b) was down 5.8 per cent at 833. Petrochemicals lost 4.5 per cent to 105. Selling pressure eased on American Israeli paper mills, and shares remained unchanged at 926

The star of the group continued to be the newly issued Polgat options. Initial demand for the options was ILS.4m., and the exchange declared the shares "buyers only." But the 5 per cent maximum limit was waived, and the options rose by 13.8 per cent to 227.5. Polgat ordinary shares were down by 15 to 585. Taal was another winner, gaining 15 to 470. Most investment company shares were lower, but Elgar (r) was up by 6.5 per cent to

It pays to watch a company's earnings per share record

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The most important guideline for investing in shares is the earnings per share record of a nings may be deceptive, since total earnings may have risen sharply, but due to an enlargement of the share capital base the earnings per share may have appreciated only

This phenomenon can be clearly perceived in a statistical report prepared by National Consultants.

The report shows that of 43 companies surveyed, no less than 33 showed a real-term increase in the net reported profit, but only 16 showed an earnings per share figure which was higher than the rise in the consumer price index, namely 48 per

Typical of this situation was the performance of some of the country's large commercial banks. IDB

Bankholding showed a 68 per cent increase in total earnings, while its earnings per share (EPS) showed a rise of only 59 per cent. Hapoalim showed an overall earnings gain of 75 per cent and an EPS of only 44 per

New bus stop signs easy on eyes—and skull too

By AARON SITTNER

Jerusalem Post Reporter While improvement in bus service may be far off, it will not be long before bus stop signs will become more attractive and easy to read. According to an announcement from the Transport Ministry, Minister Haim Landau will soon promulgate new additions to the Traffic Ordinance, setting forth standards for bus stop identification

Landau, it seems, is convinced that Egged and Dan use too much of a bus stop's sign space for their company insignia and not enough for really vital information, such as the numbers of the buses using the stop, their destinations and route descrip-

A satisfactory design has been produced by Yosef Duriel, an engineer who serves as adviser to Landau. The design has been tentatively accepted by the Dan bus cooperative. The prototype calls for the company symbol to be limited to the upper left hand corner of a red stripe running along the top of the sign. The rest of the stripe will accommodate in white lettering — the name of the bus stop. The entire area underneath this red stripe will be bright yellow. Black lettering will show the numbers of the buses calling at the stop and their destinations. On the reverse side of the sign, the bus numbers will be repeated. But instead of only the destination, there will be a list of main thoroughfares the destination.

New housing problems

THE PROPOSED increase in mortgage facilities of up to IL 800, 000 for home purchasers, and their linkage to the index announced last week by Housing Minister David Levy would appear to have solved a problem. But they have raised a host of

First of all, the new scheme is premature. On July 1, when it comes into effect, a lot of money will become available for apartments that do not yet exist. Prices will certainly initially go up. There has been a disastrous sag in construction activity. for which the former Labour government must share responsibility with the Likud. The number of building starts - in the public sector — fell by three-quarters, from 27,000 in 1975 to 7,000 last year.

Mr. Levy plans to raise the figure to 20,000 this year. Experts in the field believe that cannot be done; but a substantial increase there will be. By the beginning of 1980 a greater number of residential structures should be available in skeleton form. That would be the time to double the size of mortgages, not now.

The next question to be faced is, where will all the extra money for these mortgage loans come from? The long-term plan is to make further cuts in budgetary expenditure, so it is unlikely that the money can come from government sources. The capital market has no untapped reserves at the moment. All the spare cash is being loaned — directly or indirectly — to the Treasury as it is.

The most difficult question is what will happen when the linkage provisions begin to bite. Young people will take the advances, because they need a home. But if inflation continues and their debt grows in nominal terms year after year, there could be a wave of resentment that will cost the government dear, particularly at election time two years from now.

Those with long memories will recall the explosion of popular wrath after the devaluation of February 1962. Finance Minister Eshkol and Housing Minister Josephtal were compelled to revoke their decision to link mortgages to the dollar. Many more people were waiting for a dwelling at that tine, but mortgage-takers still number 50,000 families a year.

All these problems teach us not only what a great deal of damage ensues from inflation — that we know already. The new thing they reveal is how much additional damage can be done by using the wrong methods to combat inflation.

The authorities should have frozen consumption, public and private, all along the line. Instead they tried the easy way — at the time — of slashing a single item of expenditure — housing construction - because it would take three or four years before anybody was affected.

This particular chicken has now come home to roost. And it could well end up as the most intractable bird in the Begin

Outdated Knesset immunity

THE UNEQUALLED, sweeping parliamentary immunity Israel's legislators have granted themselves was originally an expression of the suspicious harboured by politicians schooled in the realities of the unstable politics of the Europe of the first part of this century.

Thus, the immunity of Knesset Members from prosecution for traffic offenses was explained by fears that a government bent on controlling the Knesset or manipulating critical votes would even stoop so low as to have police arrest legislators for spurious traffic offenses to keep them out of the chamber.

des are more a commentary on the flavour of ear ly Israeli political culture than on the actual development of relations between the executive and legislative in the ensuing

There is much that is left to be desired in those relations, but governmental attempts at subversion of the Knesset or use of its police power against its members has never been a problem. To the contrary. During these thirty years many Knesset Members have tried to feather their own very personal nests by exploiting their total immunity long after the basic assumptions for that immunity have been proven unfounded.

It is understandably a difficult matter to bring about necessary changes in the by-laws of a club-like institution like the Knesset. Members who are daring enough to attempt such a feat - like Shai's Amnon Rubinstein - open themselves up to charges of being "do-gooders."

Prof. Rubinstein is undoubtedly partially guilty of that charge, if doing good, is indeed a crime. The problem is that correction of the abuses that have grown out of parliamentary immunity and of MKs voting themselves munificent salaries, pension rights and other perks, can certainly not be expected from the cynics among the Knesset Members who exploit their status for their own benefit. Neither is a bill submitted by Justice Minister Tamir in the name of the government a solution. This should be a matter between the Knesset, its collective conscience and the public. The obvious solution is for the Knesset Speaker to step in and wield his authority to put an end to the abuses. Mr. Yitzhak Shamir has recently expressed himself as being opposed to these abuses. But it is not enough that he go on record with his opinion. It is the Speaker's duty to stand up for the Knesset's good name and that of its members, and fight for a revamping of the outdated and undemocratic immunity laws.

'Coexistence,' Hebron style

THOSE WHO saw, in Friday night's television report on the night raid of Arab homes in Hebron last week, the sullen anger, the mute fear, the wounded pride and the despairing resentment in the eyes of the Arab girl who haltingly told how her home had been invaded by "Hebrew-speaking" raiders, had a glimpse of what co-existence, Gush Emuzimstyle, means to her.

And those who saw, in the same newscast, how one Yosef Dayan poisoned the mind of his little boy, asking him if he knew "that there are Arabs here" and prodding him to tell the microphone "what should be done with them," had a shuddering preview of what autonomy could make of us.

Of course, of course — the "incident" was deplored and condemned by all concerned. The Prime Minister decried it; even MK Rabbi Druckmann did.

One need not doubt the sincerity of Rabbi Druckmann and his kind in their disavowal of such deeds of lawlessness and wanton pogromism.
But they do not realize that it is their ideology that has sown the bitter seed. Their ideology, which is still tailored for the drawing room, and their deeds, which have long defied law and government, are to the in-sane mouthings of a Meir Kahane and his gang as "scientific" anti-Semitism is to the anti-Semitic street

It does no good to pretend that the cowardly raid on Arab homes in Hebron last week was an isolated "incident." We are rapidly descending, rung by rung, the ladder of evil. The incidents accumulate. And, as the shameful spectacle at Ne'ot Sinal has shown, the evil is already being turned against ourselves.

Occupation as such, the subjugation of another people, is evil. Yet when it is the result of the exigencies of an ongoing war, when it is conceived as temporary and as a mortgage on an eventual peace, it does not necessarily demoralize the occupying power, and much less so

However, when occupation becomes annexation and entails the expropriation of other people's land, it already descends another rung on the ladder. If necessarily becomes more oppressive. It makes the chances of using the occupation as a bargaining counter for peace more ground," breed enduring haired. They tie the occupying power's own hands vis-à-vis the settlers who were made to believe that they were fulfilling a patriotic duty. Yet even that does not immediately demoralize the individuals concern ed, for they are acting within the limits of their own government's laws. Within the framework of occupation - which can never be humane, which is always brutal and brutalizing — these laws may still prevent the individual from commitling inhumane acts.

But when a society becomes ac-customed to depend, as one of the benefits of occupation, on the exploitation of the labour supplied by the occupied population, moral cor-ruption already reaches deeper to the roots of that society. The distinction between the national needs of foreign policy and defence, and the selfish, material interests of those who benefit from the system, becomes blurred. Patriotism can become a refuge for scoundrels. And yet, harmful as this may be for the values of our society, the system works so impersonally, so indirectly, that the moral standards of individuals may not yet be irredeemably eroded.

But when a government whose leaders actively supported Gush Emunim when it defled the previous government is itself defied, we see the spectacle of Ne'ot Sinai. We witness how a minister is spat at. We hear how Aluf Dan Shomron is lauded for "preventing a new Altalena" — the implication being that, had he not withdrawn his forces, the pioneers of Ne'ot Sinai and their Gush Emunim defenders would not have hesitated to shoot our

And when Gush Emunim and the Land of Israel movement defy the government with mounting violence. the way is open for individual bands of vigilantes, for the Meir Kahane type Ku Klax Klan, for individual murderers such as Israel Ledermann who cold-bloodedly shot down an Arab in Jerusalem.

And when the chief of staff reduces the sentence of that murderer already reduced from 20 to 10 years to three-and-a-half years (of which he will not spend many days behind bars), he signals that the life of an Arab in the eternal unified capital of Israel is dirt-cheap.

When the military administration of the occupied territories and the civilian police under its command there is "unable" to discover whose, "shots in the air" wounded and killed Arab students in Bir Zeit and Halhul, or who uproofed the vineyard at Kiryat Arba - then the demoralization has already seeped through to the individual.

The Yosef Dayan who demonstrated on television how he teaches his child hatred and murder will not remain alone. A new generation will be brought up in a gangland morality. Hebron will not remain an incident. And much more will be uprooted than the vineyard at Kiryat

IN FACT, Hebron has become part of a pattern - an illegal offshoot, unintended by the government, of an increasingly ruthless legal oppres-sion. When Israeli soldiers threw tear gas into the Beit Jala high school a year ago, and the culprits tried to smother the story, the government still at least made a show of taking action against them. Since then, the government has become more lenient with our own law-breakers. Its apparent 'inability' to deal with them looks suspiciously like turning a blind eye, like condoning their acts after the event. The arrest of the six suspects in Kiryat Arba is not enough to dispel that impression. The issue is not only punishment after the event which, if severe enough, might be a deterrent. The issue is the prevention of vigilantism, "ideologically" inspired or whatever. That is possible, if the government has the political will to do so.

As minister of defence, Ezer Weizman is responsible for law and order in the occupied territories. Whether the government in which he serves genuinely wants to let the people there rule their own lives, or whether it merely means to perpetuate Israeli rule there under the cloak of "autonomy," personal security in the territories is in Weizman's

If Weizman, who has won respect even from his political opponents for his political sanity, his human decency and his forthrightness, will make himself a figleaf to cover the shame of this government, the peace he wants so much will never be.

Weizman cannot rest content with the denunciations of the Hebron outrage mouthed by other political leaders, including his colleagues in the cabinet. He, with the machinery of law enforcement at his disposa which has shown itself so efficient in fighting PLO terrorism, must demonstrate the same effectiveness in suppressing the night raiders of Kiryat Arba. It may be impossible to prevent completely acts of terrorism. But vandalism can prevented.

It is the fashion these days to qualify any criticism of the government with the statement that the previous government was no better. In relation to what has happened at Ofra, at Bir Zeit, at Kiryat Arba and at Hebron, the present government has abandoned those minimal stapdards of morality that previous governments at least tried to uphold within the brutalising framework of war and occupation.

Leniency towards "patriots" of the Israel Ledermann breed, and turning a blind eye to "pioneers" like Yosef Davan (who expre surprise that the police had not bothered to interrogate him about the Hebron raid), will diagram for only the present government, while inaction makes it an accessory inter the fact. It will also disgrace Israel, as a state, and every one of us in-

TOWARDS A SOLUTION OF THE HOUSING PROBLEM

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — Recently, our organization, Hitahdut Olei Britania, held a meeting at Mevasseret Zion with new Israelis (formerly called olim) from Britain and oldtimers from Jerusalem. The discussion immediately focused on housing, and feeling became so strong that it was decided to go public.

The following practical suggestions have therefore been

1. The Israel Lands Administration, owning as it does over 90 per cent of the country at present, offers land for sale by public auction, where it is sold to the highest bidder — usually a speculative builder. This practice should stop. No one is expected to work for nothing and every builder is entitled to a reasonable return on the exercise of his skill. But selling land — which is so scarce and allowing a builder to make an additional profit thereon adds about two-thirds to the price of new flats in Jerusalem at least. The ILA should convey new flats to the eventual occupants in return for a reasonable annual rent — or in return for a ground rent plus a capital payment based only on actual building costs. This would reduce the price of new flats by at least 30 per cent and the price of older ones would eventually

2. A large number of flats - many even Jewish Agency flats — stand empty. A complete census of these should be taken; many, perhaps, could be made available to those in need at reasonable rents.

3. The entire framework of government housing management should be overflauled. Why is it necessary, for example, for the ILA to employ an agent such as Amidar and pay them a commission on every transaction?

4. The policy of selling by tender unused building rights attached to underdeveloped properties should should be conveyed to a non-profitmaking body, charged with the job of building either for rental or for cost-something along the lines of that successful body which flourishes in Britain, should be established by the government with Diaspora support. It might — as Norman Greenwald wrote in your March 4 issue - "build and maintain flats for young couples, new immigrants, the elderly, the disabled, and others whose gross income and net assets fall below a specified minimum." Or it might finance and monitor — as in Britain — local subsidiary housing associations, charged with building at cost for rent or purchase.

man who unblushingly admits that he "has not read the Sharett diaries and does not intend to do so."

But things are more complicated than they seem at first glance. The first public admission by an Israeli political figure that "he had not read Sharett's diary" appeared in Teddy Kollek's autobiography, "For Jerusalem" (p. 142 in the English edition). A similar attitude was adopted by Mrs. Senta Josephtal, who in a later letter to me said:"...you are doing wrong to your father... demolishing his image... ### CHRISTIANITY AND JERUSALEM

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Pos Sir, — In your editorial of May 24, there is an expression which seems strange to every Christian. You write: "Jerusalem is Jewry's first and only Holy City, Christendom's third — after Rome and Bethlehem and Islam's third — after Mecca and Medina." It is really odd to make such a gradation: Rome — Bethlehem — Jerusalem. For Christians, there does not exist any gradation between the Holy Places. Whatever might be the objective reason behind a grada-tion, for them there are no places anywhere more holy than Jerusalem with its Via Dolorosa, the Cenacle, the Mount of Olives, the Temple and the Calvary, which are not only tied to the most important events in the life of the Saviour, but are the starting points for the structure of Christianity.

Rome has a holy character in the history of the Christian faith, while Bethlehem, Nazareth and Caper-naum are linked to its origin. Jerusalem portends this religion, is its place of birth and the image of the supernatural destiny of man.
